HANS M. LOUIS-CHARLES, MD

Primary Care and Hospital Medicine

Dr. Hans M. Louis-Charles is a physician with extensive experience in outpatient primary care, inpatient hospital medicine, and clinical teaching. Since 2012, he has provided primary care at Trinity Point Medical Center in South Florida, drawing on years of hospital practice to support continuity of care and sound clinical decision-making.

His hospital medicine experience includes physician roles at JFK Medical Center, Lakeside Medical Center, Hendry Regional Medical Center, and Morton Plant Hospital. At Lakeside Medical Center, he also served as an Associate Clinical Professor of Medicine with Nova Southeastern University, contributing to the clinical education of future healthcare professionals. More recently, he worked as a Senior House Physician in primary care medicine at Northeast Florida State Hospital.

Dr. Louis-Charles earned his Doctor of Medicine degree from the American University of the Caribbean in 1997, following a Bachelor of Arts from Temple University. He completed a Primary Care Internal Medicine residency at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, graduating in 2005.

Across outpatient care, hospital medicine, and medical education, Dr. Louis-Charles has built a career centered on thoughtful patient care and the clinical experience needed to serve diverse practice settings.
